

Alders invest in transit upgrades

By Asterlisie

By a vote of 8-3, the New Felstadt Board of Alders voted last Dienstag to fund the development of new modes of conveyance for the colony. Speaking for the Board, Rheinolt Hirsch noted that "The carts and wagons brought from the Old World have proven ill-suited to Lustria's harsh terrain. A new design, we are confident, will better serve both our needs and our aims." During the debate, Hirsch's chief engineer noted that the new vehicles will have improved traction and stability, extra room for passengers and cargo, and armored plating to protect from hostile flora and fauna. New workers ease labor crunch

By Lecai Ladroi

After months of labor shortages, New Felstadt is now flush with colonists eager to work. Employers are ecstatic about this, with Fredrik Glöckner, head of the New Felstadt Development Corporation, saying that "it seems like these new workers have literally come out of the ground!" These "newly-arisen" are primarily doing manual labor and they have impressed bosses with their tireless work ethic. Though these new workers are driving down wages on entry level jobs, skilled artisans are unworried. Speaking for the Guild of Colonial Professionals, Sylvester Delacroix said "they simply don't have the brains to do our jobs." Continued on page A2.

RAIDS ROCK NEW FELSTADT

By The Loremaster

Recent attacks have left the citizens of New Felstadt on edge. On Mitterfruhl Abend, a farmstead north of the walls burned. Two days later, a ranch on the Asur road also went up in flames. In a gruesome twist, the attackers freed all of the livestock before they barricaded their victims inside their barns and lit the fires. A third attack occurred yesterday before dawn: cloaked figures broke into the Sigmarte dormitory on the Marktplatz, burnt religious texts and artifacts, and murdered an acolyte. The attackers left behind messages scrawled in blood: "Closer than you think," "Who is the real beast?" and "Beaten but not broken!"

General Maximilian v. Greifenberg has taken a resolute stance against the attackers, saying "Our craven foes ever strike where they deem us weakest, yet they misjudge the iron hearts of the Empire's sons. Stand firm, for the Griffon rules the skies." Speaking on the condition of anonymity, a member of the Burgerwache revealed that v. Greifenberg blames the Sigmartes' recent bloody temple founding for the raids. Regarding the Sigmartes, v. Greifenberg refused responsibility "for every cockeyed loon who falls off a boat."

The Sigmartes blame the Vampire Basilio, who has recently arrived in the colony, for the attack. Father Mathias Altmann is claiming that the attacks are part of a conspiracy between Lord Viggo and the Vampire to trade colonists lives for forbidden treasures. Both parties vehemently deny this claim, and, when asked if he was involved in the attacks, Basilio said "I was not. Were there survivors? Do the slain wander from their fresh graves? No?" OPINION: WARBLOODS CAN FURTHER THE GREAT PLAN

By Ye'amuxo

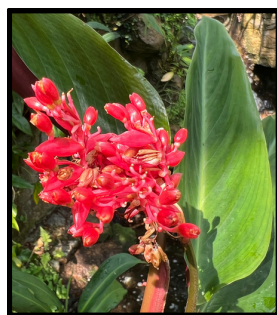

When the Old Ones created the Great Plan, they had a wonderful vision for all of the continents. Lustria would belong to the cold-blooded; guardians of the secrets. From here, the Slann would align the world in harmony and symmetry. But the other continents were for you, warmbloods! Your role was to nourish the land and creatures of the Old World and to form a bulwark against entropy. And when Chaos, destruction, and undeath arrived, you did fight them---at first. But over the centuries, you have forgotten your purpose. You have given into greed, ego, pettiness, and self-interest. And now, you are in Lustria, turning your back on the Great Plan altogether!

In Lustria, your actions hamper the Great Plan but the cold-blooded ones work to change this. Your colonists kill trees to build structures; we invite snakes to bite your ankles as a reminder that the trees are not yours. Your dams impede the sacred waters of our rivers; our Kroxigors fix this mistake with clubs. We know that you yearn for our treasures; to stop you from this folly, we erect mighty walls with impenetrable logic. Ye'amuxo cares for you, warmbloods, and has returned to Lustria to help you understand the Great Plan.

It is not too late! Return to your home continent and bask in wisdom. Relent from greed and give into the Great Plan! Defend the world from Chaos, undeath, and wanton destruction. The Old Ones will return, and when they do, Ye'amuxo will tell them of your deeds!

FLORA OF THE WEEK

Stromanthe Sanguinea

- A "prayer plant," its leaves fold together at night like praying hands
- Native to tropical climates, they prefer moist but well-draining soil and partial shade
- Can grow to 5' tall and 3' wide in the wild
- A popular houseplant in temperate climates due to its red variegated leaves (on the underside!)

LUSTRIAN ANNOUNCEMENTS

- Join us in celebrating the engagement of Sir Cecil Boulanger and Ms. Augusta Bauer! The couple met four months ago when Augusta started delivering fresh turtle eggs from New Felstadt Fisheries to Fort Victoire.
- Congratulations to Georges von der Egg, first valedictorian of the New Felstadt Academy of Natural Sciences and Rationalism! Georges' impressive studies on astronomical navigation in Lustrian waters capped several years of academic excellence. His next step? Joining the Colonial Engineering Department!
- Save a place in your thoughts for beloved son, father, brother, husband, and cobbler Fuss Schümann, who passed on last week. Schümann brought laughter and comfort to those around him; he cared for our soles and always footed the bill. Please join us in a service in his honor at Demigrph Park.

Dear Loremaster:

Hunting for glory in the wrong spots? Adopt the way of the Slann

Dear Loremaster: Why is the game on this continent so poor? I have had better luck hunting in a temple courtyard back home than I have had outside the walls of Fort Victoire. For weeks now, the grail knights of Lord Le'exile's personal retinue have been talking about "the hunt" and preparing for some glorious event, and yet I have laid eyes on neither a hart nor a hare since our pyrrhic victory against the lizards on the beach. Is there something that I am missing, or has everyone else lost their minds on the crossing?

Sincerely,

Ser Hart-Less

Dear Hart-less: Have you heard the parable of the hare and the Slann? It's an old Lustrian one and the message is you need to sit around and think carefully before expecting anything to just "happen." What type of game are you interested in? Can you make their calls? Do you know the types of traps that can ensare them? By the by, if you did lose your mind on the crossing, do practice Cothiquean Yoga with the Elves and do not drink any potions from the Hexenweg in New Felstadt.

Breaking: Tilion finds ancient schematic

By The Loremaster

Tilion, leader of the ill-fated Twice Dispossessed, arrived unexpectedly last night at Menlui-Sarath. Coming from the jungle, he demanded an immediate audience with the garrison commander. The Crier can exclusively report that he presented the commander with an authentic blueprint of an abandoned lizard temple. As of press time, Sapherian mages are reviewing document.
